"Something about old and new together makes a room special. No one does vintage better than The CEH." AERIN vintage dresser, theceh.com

"There's nothing more comforting than a soft throw blanket after a bath or rocking your little one to sleep late at night." Courtney Barton throw, shopcourtneybarton.com

"We design rooms that children can grow with. Statement art is always a good investment." "Musings on Light Blue" by Kayce Hughes, kaycehughes.com

"Storage is key in any child's space. For extra pizzazz, add a custom liner in your favorite fabric." Bunny Williams nesting baskets, ballarddesigns.com

"These plush stuffed toys are the best for cuddling at any age." Jellycat stuffed animal, biscuit-home.com

"I love a classic crib—and Jenny Lind's are the best. Bonus: They're a great bargain and available in a variety of colors." Jenny Lind 3-in-1 convertible crib, davincibaby.com

"Pattern in a nursery is a must. I am enchanted by the color and whimsy this wallpaper brings to a room." Lulie Wallace Brooklyn wallpaper, luliewallace.com

BABY TALK

Interior designer Katie Davis (katedavisdesign.com) readily admits she's got a soft spot for designing nurseries. The Houston-based mother of two savors the challenge of creating beautiful, peaceful spaces that are also functional. Case in point: window coverings. "Drapery is a great way to add color, but you need blackouts so the baby can sleep." She also loves mixing old with new. "A cool vintage dresser or unique piece of art can take a room to the next level." Since launching Katie Davis Design in 2018, the charismatic designer's M.O. has remained constant: developing close, lasting relationships with clients. Her best advice for parents-to-be? Avoid themes. "A nursery should have the ability to transform and grow with your child." Here, she shares her top picks for blending playfulness with practicality. —Elaine Raffel
